Dear Madam/Sir,

With several very successful years in the German telecommunication sector, I am now seeking new challenges in my career.

Currently I work for an international technology company – T-Systems International GmbH, Bonn, Germany - with four years as a group leader for sales projects (previously as Project Manager). Together with other companies, I have fulfilled project management and management roles for over six years. I am experienced in group management, project management and sales processes. I have built a strong background in IT and various business fields and have gathered my experiences at such foremost companies as KPMG, Deutsche Telekom and T-Systems. For further details please see my attached CV.

To develop my portfolio, skills base and ultimately benefit the company of choice I am looking for a further and yet more challenging position, specifically in the following areas of technology, services, consulting, finance and manufacturing where my key strengths lie.

Regarding the position I am seeking:

1. Sales Manager or Sales Director

I am skilled in the field of sales, executing complex sales projects, leading and managing the sales & marketing force and the related colleagues/departments.

2. General Manager

I have gathered valuable experience in coordinating groups of people and managing all the associated issues.

My skills base clearly demonstrates my key strengths which are excellent coordinating and communication abilities (including proven negotiating qualities), a creative and independent working style together with a quick and effective conflict management approach. I am able to adjust very rapidly to new situations, a result of working in an international and changing environment. I am a strategic thinker and business oriented.

With regard to location, I am open to work anywhere in the World.

I would appreciate a quick reply.

Kind regards,

Tamas Simicz
